

Watt back in action

Erin McPhee

North Shore News

Sunday, June 07, 2009

Norm Watt knows the North Shore like the back of his hand.

A resident of the area for the last 35 years, he's spent countless hours exploring the trails of North and West Vancouver.

Last year, Watt was kind enough to share a number of his favourite routes with North Shore News readers in a column dubbed Off the Beaten Path. This year is no different.

His first column of the season, posted on www.nsnews.com today, guides you along an all-season North Vancouver hike, combining a loop around the scenic Richard Juryn Memorial Trail with a return trip on part of Lynn Creek's historic Old Lillooet Trail.

Including information on elevation gain, length of time required, step-by-step instructions to keep you on track, as well as a link to an area map, Off the Beaten Path has much to offer both the casual hiker as well as the seasoned outdoor adventurer.

Check the North Shore News' website, www.nsnews.com, every Sunday for the next 12 weeks for a different hike to try.

CREDIT: NEWS photo Paul McGrath
Hiking enthusiast Norm Watt embarks on one of his favourite North Shore trails.

© North Shore News 2009

CLOSE WINDOW